Summarize why you are interested in serving:

I believe that climate change is the most urgent problem currently facing humanity. Northfield can't solve world-wide problems, but we might be able to demonstrate good models for local action that could be replicated elsewhere. That is, we can do our part, and if we do it well, we might be able to help other communities to do their part, too.

Summarize your personal background and attributes you feel are relevant to consideration of your appointment such as community involvement, experience serving on governing boards, training, education, work history, or other personal values, experience or perspectives:

In my role as professor of computer science at Carleton, I have worked closely with Carleton's Manager of Campus Energy and Sustainability on questions of how we can use energy data to identify opportunities for increasing energy efficiency. As a supervisor of student projects, I have gained expertise in the emerging field of Energy Analytics, which could be relevant to the work of the CAPAB.

As to experience on governing boards, I am currently President of the Faculty at Carleton. I'm also on the Board of Directors at the Loft Literary Center in Minneapolis. I have taught at Carleton for 27 years.
