Carlson reviewed his staff report on the Northwest Area Process Advisory Committee (NWAPAC). He stated the Planning Commission (PC) has reviewed the document and staff is looking for input from the EDA as well.

Pownell spoke about the board members and summarized what phase in the timeline the PAC is at currently.

Discussion was held on:

- how much commercial / industrial tax base is needed
- sources of growth, partnerships on where the potential is and where the EDA can be helpful
- timeline is well organized
- adjust the document to reflect what is currently happening and add in recommendations on who would facilitate the process and who would pay for it
- additional data and numbers for how many new businesses are needed
- what percentage of that can come from infill, so there is a strong sense on what and how much is needed
- anticipated costs are still being determined
- analyzing out how much money there is to spend on this, before going out for consultants and making sure funds are spent well to get a good return on investment
